TERMS OF SUBSCRIPTION.

Clubs of seven, 15 00

It is intended to make the SHELBY SENTINEL a first-class Family Newspaper, independent of sect or party, devoted to General News, Literature, and Morality. Appreciating the necessity for a Superior Newspaper in this part of Kentucky, we will bend every energy to make the SHELBY SENTINEL acceptable to all classes. To those who have a distaste for partisan strife, our paper will be a welcome guest. In the angry mutterings of discord will be hushed in the endeavor to heal the frightful wounds, which years of war have caused. To sustain our paper, we naturally expect the assistance and co-operation of the people of Shelby. While the local interests of this section will not be neglected, we will aim to advance the general prosperity of the State.

The general interests and welfare of the county can in no better way be advanced than through the medium of a newspaper. Devoting our attention to all topics of the day, we will freely and independently discuss them. To prevent any misapprehension as to the position which the SHELBY SENTINEL will occupy, we will state that our approval and support will be given to a mild and conciliatory policy, condemning all radical, revolutionary or unjust measures. Believing that this is the only course which will result in permanent prosperity to the country and that these views are such as the people of Kentucky naturally and heartily endorse, we shall uphold and defend them at all times. Firm in the opinion that we can make our paper acceptable, we ask a liberal patronage.

HOME.

BY JENNIE FOREST.

"Home, thy joys are passing lovely,
Joys no strange heart can tell."
Within the chambers of my soul
Like moonlight on a sleeping lake;
A memory glides without control,
A fairy vision to awake;
And nestling there amid the dreams,
I've cherished warmly in my heart,
That vision bright as sunlight beams;
And seems of life a needed part.
The name of home—that sacred name,
Can ever weave a magic spell,
The sweeter far than vision of fame,
The cherished home where loved ones dwell.
Oh, could I, with a poet's pen,
The beauties of a home portray,
When summer crowned my life with flowers,
Ere death had brushed its blooms away.

Even now, though weary years have fled
Since on my home I looked my last,
The vases broken—flowers are dead—
Yet treasured memories of the past,
I would not that one tide were gone,
That binds me with a sacred spell;
Though well I know the fair young flowers,
Lie withered now where night-shades dwell.

'Twas in the lonely Autumn days,
The dark-browed Reaper's shadow fell,
A spirit sang its parting lays,
An angel breathed its last farewell;
And then within our darkened home,
I knew my flowers would smile no more;
A voice had whispered, "They have come
To bloom on Heaven's immortal shore."

And when the fair, bright stars go down,
Like loved ones fading from our sight,
My spirit dreams while not a sound
Disturbs the calm and peaceful night.
It dreams of home, where sorrow's cloud
Can sever kindred hearts no more;
Where darkness ne'er again can shroud
Our loved and lost who've gone before.

Capital Story.

From the Waverley Magazine
LIFE OF AN OLD MAID

"O, I would not be an old maid for all the world," said Kate Waldron, as, with a flushed cheek, she entered the apartment where Miss Williams, a benevolent looking maiden lady of fifty, was quietly knitting. "What! not for the world, Kate?" said Miss Williams.

"No, I am sure I would not."
"And why not, pray?"
"Because they are always so confounded cross and ugly."

"Why, Kate, what has occurred to raise your ire to such a height? I hope you will spare me in your wholesale denunciations."
"Pardon me, aunt Lucy; but I was so provoked I could not help saying what I did. I have just been over to lawyer Allen's to see Annabel, and found the whole house in a complete uproar on Hitty's account. Charlie has broken her old snuff-box; and Annabel says there will be no more peace till another is procured just like it. I don't wonder she thinks so, for, when I came away, the cross old thing was raving like a bedlamite. Now I say, I never will be an old maid."

"Why, Kate, how ungenerous you are; just stop one minute and think of what you have been saying. You will never be an old maid, because they are cross, old and ugly."
"Well, she is old; and she is cross, aunt Lucy."
"True, but is she to blame for being old? and as for her unhappy disposition, ought you not rather to pity, than censure her for it? Just ask yourself, if a bad temper is not as unbecoming in a young girl, as in an old maid. Here you have come home, to use your own words, as cross as you can be; and all because you say somebody else cross why, Kate, how unreasonable!"

"Well, I don't care, if I were an old maid, I would be a good-natured one."
"You had better begin to govern your passion, for there is every prospect of your being one. It was only last evening you ran away from Henry Owning, because his attentions were getting to be rather too marked. Fie Kate, how can you laugh, when you have been guilty of such rudeness!"

"Really, aunt, I know you would have laughed too, had you seen him searching among the crowd for something he could not find, and then turn with such a desponding look. O, he was another knight of the rueful countenance."
"Kate, you are a wild creature, you remind me of a girl I once knew, of whom you are the very image. You have followed in her footsteps thus far, and, if I mistake not, you will become what she is now, an old maid."

"You mean yourself, aunt Lucy?"
"I do, and if you will get your work and sit by me, I will recount to you some of the love-passages in my life, which have not been few. I shall pass over my school-day predilections, and begin with a comical character, who was my first lover, and the first who dared to tell me so. He was a tall, awkward fellow, as uncouth in his manners, as I was ungainly in person. I met him first at an evening party in H—, where I was spending the winter; he was my gallant home, and persecuted me with most unmerciful perseverance, during my stay, which was shortened on his account. I very well recollect the first Sabbath I attended the village church, after the party. The minister was young; handsome, and very eloquent; I was fascinated with his sermon, when all at once I felt an irresistible inclination to look towards the pew where my rustic lover sat. Whether it was owing to the innate consciousness that two great eyes were fastened on me, or something else, I cannot tell; but I did so, and, O horrors! what a figure I saw for such a place. He was sitting with his arms folded across the front of the pew, his chin resting on them, and staring with his great saucer eyes directly at me. He was a fine specimen of Hogarth. I could only think of a shaggy dog with his nose resting upon his paws. The comparison was as instantaneous as it was ludicrous; and I laughed in spite of my veneration. This was repeated Sabbath after Sabbath; and that, with his week day assaults, I could bear no longer, and I quitted H— in high dudgeon. Thus ended my first love affair, and a second was not long in following.

"Soon after my return home, I went to a beautiful village situated on the Connecticut. It was the loveliest spot I ever saw; of all others, just the place for young love to nestle in. My mind, for the time being, took quite a sentimental turn. I think that it was altogether owing to the romantic beauty around me, that I did not quarrel with Bessie Demond during the six months I was there. He was the pride of the village, and my friend and devoted beau. He was constantly at my side, anticipating my every wish. I know not why it was that I took so much pleasure in his society, unless because I had thought to fear; for he was too much of a gentleman to evince any of the sentimental tender in the presence of others. Many were the rambles we took together, and long boat-rides, by moon-light, on the Connecticut. As the time of my departure drew nigh, I observed an unusual sadness in his demeanor; and he sought every opportunity to see me alone, which I carefully avoided. The last evening of my stay, he called and asked me to walk with him. I assented provided cousin Abby would accompany us; a shade of disappointment passed over his face, open face, as she arose to go. The evening was delightful. The subject of my departure was not alluded to till we were returning. Demond's voice was tremulous as he spoke, and he must have thought me agitated too, for my hand trembled in his, but from altogether a different cause than the one to which he attributed it. From a singular fatality, I always saw the ridiculous side of everything at the first glance. It was so now; and I was nearly convulsed with suppressed merriment. When we returned, Abby retired, and left us alone. I pleaded fatigue as an excuse for retiring, but he would not suffer me to do so till he had extorted my promise to correspond with him; and then, hastily imprinting a kiss upon my lips, he left me. I never saw him again; for some reason his letters never reached me; and the last that I ever heard of him he was one of the richest merchants in the large city of A—, and still unmarried.

"My next adventure was with a physician, and a widower. O, how I disliked him! the very ground on which he walked, and the very air he breathed, were odious to me; yet I was obliged to tolerate him on account of his connection with Captain K—'s family, where I was then staying. He never came into the house but I was reminded of Dumdeikes, in the Heart of Midlothian."

"One morning while arranging my curls before the mirror in the sitting-room, a form suddenly appeared at my side. It was the odious doctor; ere I was aware of his intention his arm encircled my waist, and he snatched a kiss. Vexed beyond all measure, I bestowed such a hearty box on his ear as sent him reeling from me. Just at that moment Mrs. K. entered the room, and said—
"Lucy, my love, the doctor wishes you to ride with him to-day to—"
"I was about to give him an unqualified 'no,' when a glance from her eye checked me. It was a stinging cold eye, and I am sure, if there had been one particle of love in my heart, it would have turned to ice long before we reached N—. I believe the doctor thought so, for he made no allusion to the subject till we were returning, and then he made a formal declaration, the thing of all others for which I ever felt the utmost horror. I feigned surprise and embarrassment, and the generous fellow out of pity for my youthful timidity, gave me a fortnight in which to decide the solemn affair. I'll assure you I was shy of the doctor for a time, and three weeks passed ere he found an opportunity of addressing me again on the subject; and when he did so he received an unqualified refusal.

"I had scarcely disposed of him when I was beset by a strange compound, as heterogeneous in its nature as was my first lover, differing, however, in this respect, he had not half so much sense. He offered me his hand in as business like a manner as he would have bargained for a load of pork; and was struck with blank amazement at his being rejected. But I will dwell no longer on this; it is sufficient to say we quarrelled and parted with disgust. A little more than a year afterwards, as I was passing through the most populous street in our city, my attention was attracted by the clatter of wheels on the pave, and the loud crying of a young child. I turned around; behind me was my quondam lover, bolting at a furious rate, and drawing after him his baby boy, which was screaming most lustily; far in the rear was his wife, endeavoring with all her might to keep up with the railroad speed of her husband; the sight was ludicrous in the extreme, and, for more than six months afterwards I never thought of the anxious father in his hurry-scurry expedition, without indulging in a hearty laugh.

"Soon after this I went again to H—, and was constantly in the society of Alfred Graham, the minister of whom I have before spoken. Of all others he was the very one to please such a disposition as mine; and for once in my life, I loved deeply, truly and fervently. There was something in the stern beauty of his face—in the broad, high forehead, the dark, thrilling eyes. He seldom smiled, but when he did, that smile was like sunshine in the bosom of the clouds, inexpressibly beautiful. To me a heart like his was indeed a prize, and I felt proud of the conquest. Our troth was plighted, and in a few weeks we were to have been married, but for an unlucky accident which occurred, that brought with it a stern reprimand from my father.

"A rustic party had assembled in 'Fairy Vale,' to pass the day. We were among the number, and Graham was unusually attentive. Toward the close of the day, I strolled away from the rest of the party and seated myself on a moss-covered stone beneath a lofty oak, on the little causeway that had been built in days 'lang syne.' It was shaded on one side by forest trees, and on the other a deep ditch had been opened to drain the meadow land beyond. I had been there I know not how long, when a soft step was at my side; I dared not look up. I knew it was Graham, and felt that if my eyes encountered his, he might read there more than I wished him to know. He seated himself by me; and the rich, deep tones of his voice, now modulated by tenderness, fell on my listening ear.

"I know not how long we might have remained there, had not a rough voice startled us with—
"Ha! truants, I have found you at last; all stragglers are requested to return to the grove, as we are about to disperse."

"We arose and slowly retraced our steps, till the ditch alone separated us from the company. We were crossing it when an inadvertent step precipitated Graham into what well might be called the 'Slough of Despond' beneath. There was a rush, and in a few minutes he was rescued from his uncomfortable bath, but in such a woful plight—his hair, face, hands, and all, were reeking with mud; for, to use a homely expression, 'he had gone in on all four.' Had this happened to any other it would not have been half so ridiculous, but to him, the grave Alfred Graham! O, I laughed immoderately, and with the rest of the ladies, drew back as he passed, to avoid a collision. The next day he called to assure me he was not hurt, and to renew the conversation so unexpectedly broken off in the midst of a very tender episode. He looked me in the face; a smile was playing round my mouth. I could resist the impulse no longer, and I laughed outright.

"Really, Lucy, I did not expect this trifling from you."

"Pardon me, I replied, 'I was thinking of your dubious appearance yesterday.'"
"He essayed again to speak; again I smiled; when, hastily rising, he caught his hat and rushed from the house.

"I saw what I had done, and burst into tears; but in vain; the Rubicon was passed, and Alfred Graham never returned. In a few weeks he sent in his resignation, and, amid the tears and regrets of his flourishing society, left for the continent.

Local Items.

From all indications, we do not apprehend a drought in this section very soon.

We notice that our friend, J. D. Harrington, Esq., of Louisville, has been qualified as an attorney before the Court of Appeals, at Frankfort.

Last Monday being the first day of the Circuit Court, some stock was offered for sale; we understand but few sales were made. Auctioneers have made no report.

We refer our readers to the advertisement of H. Frazier & Son. Their stock is complete and well selected, and will be sold at living rates. Give them a call.

A correspondent says things went off well at the Nelson Fair. We suppose they did, as several shooting affairs are reported, one man being killed and others wounded. The things that went off well, are at least dangerous.

SHOOTING IN VERSAILLES.—On Thursday evening there was a shooting scrape in Versailles between a young man named Henry George and Charles A. Stephenson, in which the latter received a shot in the knee, wounding him pretty severely.

John R. Beckley, Collector of Internal Revenue, is in his new office, over B. B. Ross' Book and Drug Store, prepared to receive revenue now due. Those interested should come forward, pay up and save trouble and cost.

Those enterprising young men, H. & H., have the most complete variety store that our town has ever patronized. It would be difficult to call for any article in the grocery, notion or variety line that they do not sell.

HENDERSON FAIR.—The Henderson Fair begins October 2d and continues four days. The list of premiums is liberal and will bring out a fine display of stock. We return thanks to the Secretary of the Association for a complimentary ticket.

Messrs. Gorham & Schooner have added very largely to their stock and offer great inducements to purchasers. The increase in their trade has compelled them to enlarge their house. We are glad to see our town merchants doing such extensive business.

At the Nelson Fair, in the sweep-stake ring for mules, the premium was awarded to Alfred Boyd, of this county. Geo. S. Howell, of Shelby, took the premium on buggy mare, "Lost Cause," and also premium and certificate on buggy stallion.

Gentlemen of the Shelbyville Brass Band, we appreciate the delightful serenade given, Monday night, and return our thanks for your remembrance. To drive away dull care and invite sweet slumbers and happy dreams, nothing is more fit than midnight music.

R. T. OWEN & Co.—This firm is in receipt of a large and well selected stock of Fall and Winter Clothing. We advise our friends to examine the Superior Stock of Goods which they are now opening, and which they are offering at very reasonable prices.

KRUEGER & CRAPSTER.—It will be seen that these gentlemen have formed a co-partnership, and have brought on a very large and well selected stock of Boots and Shoes. They have a number of workmen engaged in the manufacture of Superior Work.

Shelby Circuit Court began on Monday, his honor, Judge Geo. W. Johnston, presiding.—J. R. Dupuy, Esq., Commonwealth Attorney. The docket is extensive, numbering 50 Commonwealth and 223 common law cases. The only cases for murder are, Commonwealth vs. Edward Terrill; Commonwealth vs. Geo. Hall, f. m. c.

At the time we go to press there have been two convictions, a couple of American citizens of African descent being sent to the Penitentiary, for respectively four and five years.

The Watchman of New York says: We rejoice to learn that Columbia Theological Seminary has received, through Dr. Adger, twelve thousand five hundred dollars in cash, from two liberal friends residing within the limits of our Southern Church. This act of munificence will sustain the hopes and call forth new efforts to repair the heavy loss incurred by the ravages of war. Many who contributed to the two hundred thousand dollars thus swept away will very gratefully appreciate the aid given by these friends, without solicitation, in the commencement of their effort to build up again demolished foundations of their cherished institution.

The Scott county fair, which closed last Thursday, after continuing three days was an entire success. The average attendance was about four thousand daily, the proportion of handsome and agreeable ladies being very large. The exhibition was exclusively of horses and mules. The character of horses is represented as being the finest. Saxton's band furnished delightful music. Everything passed off well, and the management deserves much praise.—Frankfort Freeman.

A personal difficulty took place at Piedmont, West Virginia, on the 20th inst., between Mr. Thomas Paxton, of the former place, and Mr. David Gossorn, editor of a Radical paper at New Creek, called the Union Banner. On Saturday evening last, about five o'clock, Dr. Trimble was waylaid by an assassin on the Tickton Pike, about three miles from Mount Sterling, Ky., and shot. It is said the agent in England, of Washington College, Virginia—the same that Gen. Lee presides over—reports donations to the amount of £60,000; the agent in France reports that he is doing very well, but gives no particulars, and the agent along the Mississippi river reports $50,000, which is to be largely increased when the cotton crop is sold. All this, in addition to $190,000, is now in hand.

The Cincinnati Enquirer sums up one day's report of the suicidal mania, in New York city, as follows:

Harry Clark, photographer on Broadway, poisoned himself on account of his jealousy of a courtesan. Bernard Conroy, tailor, blew his brains in a fit of delirium tremens. Percise, an Italian, leaped out of a second story window. Mary Smith jumped into East river. Several other attempts were made the same day. Love and liquor were the causes.

MR. SMITHSON, a Washington banker, has brought suit for damages against Secretary Stanton, in the United States Court for the District of Columbia. He alleges in his declaration that he was illegally arrested by order of Mr. Stanton, tried by military commission, and for a considerable time confined in a military prison; that his house was illegally seized by order of the same functionary; his family ejected whilst he was in prison, and divers other wrongs and indignities done to himself and family illegally. Able counsel have been employed on both sides, and it is intended to make this a test case.

According to the dispatches and other accounts from the South, the cotton crop in many parts of the cotton-growing region will be very light. The heavy and continued rains, and the ravages of the army-worm combined, will cut down the harvest in some places to less than half a crop. In some places the crop has been destroyed by the worm, and in others, especially in the low lands, it has been washed out. Some planters hope to save their cotton from the worm by cutting payons between their plantations and those attacked by the worm, as it cannot cross water, but even this resort will not operate successfully to any appreciable extent.

Miscellaneous.

The Speech of Gen. Wool.

The strong and vigorous speech of the veteran General Wool, delivered at the Soldiers' and Sailors' Convention, at Cleveland, will fall upon the public mind like the blast of a trumpet. The cotemporary of General Scott, the hero of three wars, far in the decline of life, with no possible object in view of a personal or selfish character, the warnings he gives to his countrymen can not but be heeded and respected by them. We accordingly republish the following extract from the address:

"Another civil war is foreshadowed unless the freedmen are placed on equality with their previous masters. If this can not be accomplished, Radical partisans, with a raging thirst for blood and plunder, are again ready to invade the Southern States and lay waste the country not already desolated, with the sword in one hand and the torch in the other. These revengeful partisans would leave their country a howling wilderness for the want of more victims to gratify an unquenching cruelty. If they should succeed in inflicting on the country another war, it would be more terrible than the one from which we have just emerged. It would not be confined to the Southern States, but extend itself the length and breadth of the United States, and only close with the overthrow of the best government ever devised and the finest country on the face of the globe. If such should be the fate of our great Republic Empire, the cause must not be sought for in our military camps, but in the forum thronged with inflammatory orators and aspiring demagogues, with souls dead to their country's honor and spotted with corruption."

The following dispatch was cheered enthusiastically, and, after its reading, three cheers for Ned. Forest was called for and given:

"MEMPHIS, TENN., September 17. 'To the President of the Soldiers' Convention, Cleveland, Ohio:

"Soldiers of the late Confederate army met here to-day, and deputed the undersigned to congratulate your Convention in your efforts to restore peace and quietude to the country, and to express their deep sympathy with your patriotic purpose, and further to assure you that the Confederate soldiers are entirely willing to leave the determination of their rights as citizens of States, and of the United States to the soldiers of the Union.

"On our part we pledge security of life, person, property and freedom of speech and opinion to all. A mass meeting will be held here to-morrow night to give formal expression to these purposes and sentiments.

N. B. FORREST, LEON TRUESDALE, M. C. GALLOWAY, MARCUS JORDON, I. HARVEY MATHER, JAMES R. CHALMERS, L. J. DEEPSIE.

A committee was appointed to forward a response to the above dispatch.

A response to the Memphis telegram was read and approved by the Convention as follows:

"Soldiers' and Sailors' Convention, Cleveland, Ohio, to N. B. Forrest, Thomas Jordan and others, Memphis Tennessee:

"The National Convention of Soldiers and Sailors assembled here, are profoundly grateful for the patriotic sentiments expressed in your dispatch.

"We hail with pleasure every effort to restore peace, prosperity and brotherly affection throughout our country. War has its victories, but peace and union are blessings for which we will manfully contend until harmony and justice are restored under the Constitution.

GORDON GRANGER, President of the Convention.

The following letter was written by General Grant to the Pittsburgh Soldiers and Sailors Convention:

HEADQUARTERS ARMIES U. STATES, Washington, Sept. 18, 1866.

Edwin Dudley, Chairman ex-soldiers' and sailors' Union:

SIR:—General Grant directs me to acknowledge the receipt of your invitation to be present at the National Convention of soldiers and sailors to be held at Pittsburgh, Pennsylvania, September 25, 1866, for political purposes.

He instructs me to say that it is contrary to his habit and to his convictions of duty to attend political meetings of any character whatever, and that he sees with regret the action of any officer of the army taking a conspicuous part in the political dissensions of the day.

I am, sir, very respectfully, your obedient servant,

U. S. GRANT.

ADAM BADEAU, Colonel and A. D. C.

I. O. O. F.—ANNUAL SESSION OF THE GRAND LODGE.—The Grand Lodge of the Order of Odd Fellows in the United States met at Baltimore on Monday. Twenty-four Grand Lodges and sixteen Grand Encampments were represented. Grand Sir Veitche's report stated that the general condition of the order was highly gratifying. At no former period had it been in so favorable a situation. The past year had been one of unexampled success. He hoped the warmest sympathy would continue to be exhibited toward the Southern brethren, whose halls and regalia had been damaged or destroyed, and who were too much impoverished to repair the waste of war.

New York has had a terrible fire, in which five persons were burned to death.
